

Napapong Pongnapang serves as an associate professor at Mahidol University's Department of Radiological Technology in Bangkok, Thailand. Additionally, he holds the position of adjunct senior lecturer in Medical Imaging and Radiation Sciences at Monash University's Faculty of Medicine, Nursing, and Health Sciences in Australia. He is also an adjunct faculty for the medical physics graduate program at Mahidol University taking care of the diagnostic physics curriculum. He earned his Bachelor's degree in Radiological Technology from Mahidol University and completed his doctoral studies in Medical Physics at the University of Texas Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences in San Antonio. He actively contributes to international education and training initiatives for radiographers and medical physicists. Napapong's involvement extends to organizations like the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), where he participates as an expert in numerous international and regional projects.